The spectacle of thousands of predominantly young people taking to streets in nonviolent protest against the threat of climate catastrophe is reminiscent of the mass demonstrations and sit-downs of the anti-nuclear Committee of 100 (C100) in the 1960s. Like Extinction Rebellion (XR), the Committee ¶ as indeed the broader anti- nuclear movement ¶ was a response to an existential threat to civilisation, possibly even to human survival.

One thing you have to know though is The 100 series as books isn't quite like the show. They take place in the same world with some of the same characters and move at a much slower pace but it's the same three dimensional sincere characters. Rebellion picks up where the last book left off and it was as if the last book never ended.
