methodology that will help your organization meet its most crucial goals.

Leaders want to see changes in behavior as a result of what people have learned and may expect these new behaviors to deliver results for the business.

Kirkpatrick Model program is explored throughout this dissertation. A mixed-method approach has been employed to complete this study. In particular, a web-based survey and three online focus groups were administered to collect data needed to adequately answer research questions proposed in this study.

The findings show that the New World Kirkpatrick Model is an effective approach to evaluate the Regional Training program at MFF. Eight themes that can further inform the planning and delivery of the training program were identified from the qualitative data. This study also investigated the correlation among four levels (reaction, learning, behavior, and results) of the New World Kirkpatrick Model, and the findings indicated that there is a positive correlation among these four levels of the model. These results provide further evidence that the outcome of the training program does not differ by participant's demographic characteristics, such as gender, age, race, level of education, or experience. Overall, this study has significance as it proposes a sound training program evaluation approach that can assist MFF to make informed decisions on revising and improving the current training programs. Moreover,

In today's global, competitive environment, it's no question that we need to evaluate-and prove the value of-our training programs. That, of course, is easier said than done. Fortunately, the four-level evaluation model simplifies what can be a complex process. This Infoline explains in detail each of the four evaluation levels, what resources you need for each level, and which programs you should evaluate.

This book (with an accompanying audio CD) describes selected varieties of World Englishes, and discusses the advantages and disadvantages of selecting a particular variety from the point of view of both teachers and learners. It aims to examine and re-evaluate concepts such as 'standard', 'variety',
