In that scenario, the company is the "applicant" who has the authority to file and prosecute patent applications, and the inventor does not have any standing with the patent office. Once the patent issues, the owner of a patent enjoys significant commercial benefits, as they have the right to exclude others from making, using, selling, offering for sale, or importing the claimed invention.

PATENT OWNERSHIP VS. INVENTORSHIP: WHO REALLY CONTROLS THE ...

A patent is a form of intellectual property that gives its owner the legal right to exclude others from making, using, or selling an invention for a limited period of years in exchange for publishing an enabling public disclosure of the invention. In most countries, patent rights fall under private law and the patent holder must sue someone infringing the patent in order to enforce his or her ...

Patent - Wikipedia

The first patent was granted on July 31, 1790 to Samuel Hopkins for a method of producing potash (potassium carbonate). The earliest law required that a working model of each invention be submitted with the application. Patent applications were examined to determine if an inventor was entitled to the grant of a patent.

History of patent law - Wikipedia

A patent must name all inventors. But, how do you know who is an inventor? And, what is inventorship, and why is it important? Who is a patent inventor?. Every person who contributes to the claims of an issued patent is an inventor for that patent, under U.S. law. Patent inventorship means simply that the person in question is an inventor.
