Filling grids with words is something you may have seen in puzzle magazines. Similar to crosswords (but without any clues), the aim is to fill a crossword-style grid with some given words. This is a question style that I've seen occasionally but isn't on a lot of papers. It's a useful exercise nevertheless as it makes children think about the words in terms of letters, rather than meaning, and manipulate them in a way which is similar to Non-Verbal Reasoning.
